Computer Generated Imagery (CGI) is a broad term that, strictly speaking, covers all types of computer graphics used in a range of applications, from science to engineering to medicine to art. Today, the term “CGI” 31 brings to mind the movies, and specifically their fantastic, awe-inspiring computer-generated visual effects (VFX). A film’s imagery can be fully computer-generated (think Toy Story), 32 it can be seamlessly integrated into live-action footage. You may not even be able to see it, but CGI is used in a wide range of film 33 from science-fiction to horror films. CGI can be used to create, manipulate or enhance imagery to build realistic-looking environments, or create 34 that seem completely real and commonplace or completely real and out of this world. The early examples of CGI don’t include realistic creatures 35 outer space, but you might be surprised just how early computer-generated imagery began showing up in films.

Lunar New Year kicks off Saturday as one of the most important holidays in Vietnam, South Korea, China and other Asian countries. Typically, it starts on the second new moon after winter solstice. On the Gregorian calendar, the civil calendar used in most countries, including the United States, the Lunar New Year changes every year, as 36 the dates of holidays like Rosh Hashana, Diwali and Ramadan. It can be easy to think 37 a calendar as a scientific given, or a reflection of the laws of the universe. 38, as these holidays remind us, there are as many ways to track time as there are cultures and languages. Each calendar reveals something about how the people who created it relate to the world around them 39 also preserving rich cultural identities and memories. Most time-keeping traditions track the 40 of the sun, moon and stars. Others consider seasonal events, like the autumnal swarming of sea worms, used to orient each year in the Trobriand Islands off New Guinea.

四、閱讀測驗【請依照段落上下文意，選出最適當的答案】

第一篇：

When it comes to brunch, does it get much more classic than Eggs Benedict? While we love all sorts of brunch items, this English muffin, poached egg, hollandaise combo has a special place in our heart. But whoever thought of this perfect dish that so elegantly combines crunchy, savory, creamy and gooey into one delicious treat? Well, there are a few competing theories.

The earliest record traces back to the popular Delmonico’s Restaurant in Lower Manhattan. It’s said that chef Charles Ranhofer came up with the combination in the 1860s when Mrs. LeGrand Benedict, one of his regular diners, grew tired of the menu and wanted something new. His recipe, which he dubbed Eggs a la Benedict, was published in his cookbook in 1894.

Another legend attributes the creation to a man named Lemuel Benedict in 1894. After a night of drinking, Benedict wandered into the Waldorf Hotel, also in Manhattan. There he ordered a few components of this dish (though he ordered bacon instead of Canadian bacon and toast rather than an English muffin). Seeing this order come through, the maître d’, Oscar Tschirsky, recognized how tasty it could be. Tschirsky put the dish on the menu, though this time adding the signature Canadian bacon and English muffin. If this story is true, Tschirsky would be a pretty prolific creator. He’s also credited with the Waldorf salad we know and love. Oh, and one more thing to note, Tschirsky previously worked at Delmonico’s right around the time eggs a la Benedict started to become popular.

Other origin stories are told, so many that it seems doubtful that we’ll ever know the true inventor of the delicious dish gracing brunch menus everywhere. Whoever is responsible certainly deserves a pat on the back, as the combination of crunchy and pillowy English muffin, creamy and rich hollandaise sauce, warm and runny poached eggs and salty Canadian bacon is one for the ages. It’s funny to think it might have been created by a man on a mission to alleviate his hangover or just a woman craving something new!

【2】41. What is this article mainly about?

- ① It explains why Eggs Benedict is so popular and tasty.
② It introduces two theories about the origins of Eggs Benedict.
③ It teaches how Eggs Benedict can be made more delicious.
④ It shows what ingredients are used to make Eggs Benedict.

【4】42. According to this article, who should be the true creator of Eggs Benedict?

- ① Charles Ranhofer.
② Lemuel Benedict.
③ Both Charles Ranhofer and Lemuel Benedict.
④ There is yet no clear answer.

【1】43. Which of the following is closest in meaning to the word “prolific” in Paragraph 3?

- ① productive                      ② protective
③ precious                      ④ previous

【3】44. According to this article, which of the following statements is NOT true?

- ① The inventor of Eggs Benedict deserves credits for creating such a delicious dish.
② Eggs Benedict typically consists of an English muffin, Canadian bacon, poached eggs, and hollandaise sauce.
③ Oscar Tschirsky never worked for the Delmonico’s Restaurant.
④ Mrs. LeGrand Benedict was a frequent customer of Delmonico’s Restaurant.

【4】45. According to the article, what was invented by Oscar Tschirsky?

- ① Hollandaise sauce                      ② Canadian bacon
③ Napoli pizza                      ④ Waldorf salad

第二篇：

Twice a week, researchers wander up and down the Gulf Coast of Texas searching for endangered birds, sea turtles and marine mammals in an effort to understand the coastal ecosystem—and, in the process, they come across a lot of garbage that’s washed up on the beach. But amongst the volleyballs, soles of high-heeled shoes and other random debris they find, one type of trash stands out: Creepy toy dolls. Researchers at Mission-Aransas National Estuarine Research Reserve have found dozens of dolls (and various doll body parts) while surveying a 40-mile stretch of the beach between Padre Island and Matagorda Island in southeastern Texas. And though it’s not clear why dolls, specifically, keep washing up on the beach, the unnerving discoveries help raise awareness about the ripple effects of littering. It’s an eerie illustration of one of the reserve’s important research findings: That Texas beaches get 10 times the amount of trash as those of other north-central states along the Gulf of Mexico.

Texas likely gets so much debris because of the loop current, a warm-water flow that travels up from the Caribbean and into the gulf, according to a two-year study the reserve conducted with other Gulf-Coast research organizations. The study found that the majority of washed-up debris was made of plastic and that the amount of garbage increased in the spring and summer. Scientists have been finding dolls on the coast for years, but only recently started posting about them regularly on the reserve’s Facebook page. One of the first to attract a lot of online attention turned out to be the head of a sex doll. Tunnel tells McClatchy the reserve “got a lot of followers on the page after that.” Some of the toys have no hair. Others have gooseneck barnacles growing out of their eyes and mouths. Turtles have taken bites out of others. Many are missing body parts. It’s enough to make you shudder—and psychologists say a big reason why we find these and other dolls “creepy” is because they make us feel uncertain. So many people are disturbed by the toys that there’s even a formal name for the fear of dolls: pediophobia, which falls under the umbrella category of fear of humanoid figures, known as automatonophobia.

【3】46. What can we learn from this article?

- ① Why do people throw away creepy dolls on Texas beaches?
② Why do creepy dolls keep increasing every year on Texas beaches?
③ How do creepy dolls raise awareness about washed-up debris on Texas beaches?
④ How do people conquer the fear of creepy dolls on Texas beaches?

【4】47. According to this article, what is the reason to explain why Texas beaches get a large amount of trash?

- ① a very long coastline along the gulf
② a high population density along the coast
③ a limited waste management infrastructure of the local government
④ a warm ocean current that flows in the gulf

【3】48. According to this article, which of the following statement is NOT true?

- ① It was found that the amount of the washed-up garbage increased in Spring and Summer.
② The washed-out creepy dolls include the dolls with gooseneck barnacles growing out of their eyes and mouth.
③ The objective of the researchers mentioned in the passage is to remove the waste on the coast.
④ Pediophobia known as fear of dolls is a type of automatonophobia.

【1】49. Which of the following is closest in meaning to the word “unnerving” in Paragraph 1?

- ① frightening
② tentative
③ imperial
④ wholesome

【1】50. According to this article, when did people start to pay a lot of attention to the garbage washed up on the Texas beaches?

- ① They saw the photos of the washed-up creepy dolls.
② They found they were disturbed by the debris of the toy dolls.
③ They became aware of the ripple effects of littering.
④ They were required to reduce litter by the newly implemented new polices.
